Rooted in the theory of psychoanalytic self psychology as put forth by Heinz Kohut and his colleagues, Treating the Self focuses on the application of the self-psychological concept of the psyche to the actual conduct of psychoanalytic treatment. The result is not a "how-to" approach, but rather a volume that suggests a theory of treatment and offers guidelines for creative ways of thinking about therapy.

Self-compassion also requires taking a balanced approach to our negative emotions so that feelings are neither suppressed nor exaggerated. This equilibrated stance stems from the process of relating personal experiences to those of others who are also suffering, thus putting our own situation into a larger perspective.

The objective self is an individual person, reflexive of one's own consciousness. This reference is necessarily subjective, thus self is a reference from a subject for a object. The sense of having a self—or self-hood—should, however, not be confused with subjectivity itself. Ostensibly, there is a directness outward from the subject that refers inward, back to its 'self' (or itself).

The main experiential element of Hinduism is moksha. Moksha is, formally, the liberation from samsara. Samsara is the endless cycle of reincarnation and rebirth. However, moksha involves many experiences that are not easily explained. It is a complete liberation from the self, or atman, and the liberated individual becomes one with everything.
